MARRIAGES.

All Applying for Licenses Must Now Make an Affidavit.

Those who contemplate entering into a state of married blessedness must in future, in reckoning up the probable initiatory expenses, make an allowance for an additional item of fifty cents to that which their predecessors have been in the habit of expending. This will be occasioned by an additional legal transaction which has to be performed when the would-be Benedict lies to the County Clerk's office to obtain the necessary legal license for the step he is about to take. It is in the form of an affidavit, and reads as follows:

In the matter of the application for a license to marry—
State of California, county of Los Angeles.
being first duly sworn, deposes and says that the above is his name; that he is a native of —; that he is of the age of — years, and a resident of —, in the county of —, State of California; that he knows the above named —; that she is a native of — years, and a resident of —, county of —, State of California, and that he knows of no legal objections to their marriage.

(Signed)
This law went into effect yesterday for the first time and will in future be required to be complied with by every person applying for a marriage license. In the case of the marriage of minors the consent of the parents will also have to be furnished as heretofore.

Suits for Slander.

Frank N. Orrin commenced suit for slander against Robert W. Lacy, of Pasadena, in the Superior Court yesterday to recover $30,000 damages. The plaintiff alleges that on the 27th of May defendant said in the presence of several persons: "I have tracked the hay you took from my place last night to your place, and I want you to pay for it. You took it" damaging the plaintiff in the sum of $10,000. On the 15th of December, 1886, plaintiff alleges defendant said in the presence of others: "I don't suppose he would take things if he wasn't so poor," damaging him in the sum of $10,000. And on the 27th of September, 1886, defendant said: "He has taken all the oranges from my trees," damaging him in the further sum of $10,000; total damages, $30,000.

Pa. Human Passengers.

The following left on the 7:30 train: Miss Merz, G. W. Stroppe, Mr. Galloway, R. Payne, E. Phillips, Mr. Sonsteg, Mr. Harbin, Mr. Wakeman, E. R. Parris, Alex. Badlam, Arnold Pollak, G. H. Taylor, W. B. Collins.

Los Angeles High School Alumni.
All members of the above named association are requested to call for their invitations to the annual reunion and reception to the graduating class at Day & Stoumen's music store in the old postoffice building, on Saturday, June 25th, between 9 A. M. and 9 P. M.

Marriage Licenses.

The following named persons were yesterday granted license to wed: John Lemko and Annie Edvardson, G. C. Valpe and L. Brew, J. E. Wood and M. A. Sweney, Fred Voss and Rose Ginn, W. T. Hirston and Julia Frank.

COMMENCEMENT.

Thirteenth Annual Exercises of the High School.

ESSAYS AND ORATIONS.

Final Test of Scholarship of Those Educated in the Los Angeles Schools.

The 13th annual commencement exercises of the Los Angeles High School took place at the Grand Opera House last night on which occasion there was a large attendance of the friends of the graduating members of the class of '87. In the box at the right of the stage were the members of the Board of Education as follows: Dr. Joseph Kurtz, President; Mrs. Anna S. Averill, Secretary; C. P. Thurston, F. S. Graham, C. N. Earl and Superintendent W. W. Friesner.

The graduating class of which there were 19 members were seated on the stage and arranged behind the lights were numerous floral designs many of which were of great beauty. The exercises a synopsis of which is given below showed that under the able training of the Principal, Miss L. A. Packard, and her corps of assistants, Miss F. M. L. Chapman, Miss M. J. Frick, Miss C. P. Bradfield and Professor H. Ludlam, the young ladies and gentlemen had received a training which will in the future prove of inestimable benefit to them. The names of the graduates are to be found below connected with the parts all had to fill in the exercises of the evening, and it is to be regretted that space will not permit each essay and oration to be given in full, for all were worthy of perusal by the public in general.

After an overture by the Heine Quartette the following introductory remarks were given by PRESIDENT DR. KURTZ.

Ladies and Gentlemen: According to a time-honored custom, and by request of my colleagues of the Board of Education, I have the honor to address you on the thirteenth annual exercises of the Los Angeles High School, the Class of '87, as they are pleased to style themselves. Having labored under more than ordinary disadvantages as compared with previous classes, they were forced to exert their energies in a very great measure to accomplish their object. But I am happy to state that they have fully as well succeeded as their predecessors in deserving their diplomas.

Those disadvantages to which I allude consisted mainly in the lack of school-rooms, which are indispensable to properly conduct their studies. You are all aware that with the growth of this city there must follow a corresponding increase in the number of pupils. Last year we had to provide for over 1800 more school children than the previous year. Therefore we built additions to various schoolhouses; also moved the central school to its present site, and before we could provide for our High School we found our treasury so depleted that we had to abandon our plans and get along as best we could. In fact we had not yet buildings enough for the primary and grammar grades, and so we were obliged to build shanties, rough lumber buildings, in some places the city to furnish room for the pupils. And those temporary shanties stand to-day, a monument of poverty and disgrace to this wealthy city. In spite of all that, we were still obliged to establish "half sessions" in many of the schools in order to accommodate all. Consequently our High School had to suffer with the rest, the more so as we had first of all to grant our children a primary and grammar education, and therefore we had to double up on our High School; there is to allow them only half-day sessions, two classes in the morning and two in the afternoon. Now there is not much amiss to teach children in the primary department only three hours a day, but three hours daily for a high school is certainly insufficient.

And this condition prevails to-day and will to a much larger extent prevail during the next term, for according to our school census taken recently we must provide seating capacity for about 1800 to 2000 more pupils the next term than we had the past year. Los Angeles is booming, not only in real estate, but in school children as well. Foreseeing that, the Board had an act of the Legislature passed this last session which enables the city to raise the necessary money by a special election, and in due time we called upon the Council, asking it to take the legal steps towards this election. After many weeks the Council finally (day before yesterday) gave the matter up as a shapeless mass of confusion, and the necessary call for an election will soon be published. The election may take place a month hence and if it results in the affirmative it will take some months yet to dispose of the bonds and then the school-sites have to be selected, plans and specifications to be made and by all that 3 or 4 months will have passed before we may begin to build about 40 new schoolrooms. You may well imagine that we can scarcely get possession of them before the end of the next school-year. The result of this is a calamity to this city, perhaps 1000-2000 children may have to be refused admittance to our schools on account of lack of room and this may turn away and keep many thousands of people from our city who will naturally prefer to live in a place where they are offered a better opportunity to educate their children. Now in spite of such difficulties, in spite of the short time allotted to our scholars of this High School, they had only 9 months in the year and only half-day sessions. This present graduating class has done well, they have faithfully made up at home what they could not do in the classroom where they had scarcely more than time enough to recite, and therefore they deserve the more credit in accomplishing their object. Their exercises which will take place now will bear testimony to my statement.

ESSAYS AND ORATIONS.

Miss Mary L. Hays delivered the following salutatory: "In appearing before you for the last time as pupils of the Los Angeles High School we do not come pretending to be either scholars or Solomons, but simply with a desire to interest you and to prove to you that our four years work has not been in vain. We are glad to see so many present, and hoping you will enjoy our exercises extend to you all a most cordial greeting."

Marco Hellman delivered an oration on "The March of Civilization," in which he detailed the historical progress and advance of increasing intelligence, bringing the subject of his remarks down to the present time, and paying tribute to the various arts, sciences and institutions which have and do play their parts in this movement. The public schools and the press are the weapons in the warfare against barbaric custom and will carry the battle into success.

Victorine Dol read the following essay on

ALMS GIVING AND TRUE CHARITY.

Through the streets of a great city

hastens a crowd of people to the shelter of cheerful homes out of the bitter cold of the night. The wealthy in luxurious carriages, and the less fortunate foot-traveler threading pavement and sidewalk, scarcely conscious of the presence of the wretchedly poor, to whom no door is to open this long night.

In tattered garments the crippled organ-grinder, the peddler, the beggar and the unfortunate stand ready to receive the penny which some gentle-hearted passer-by might place into their open palms, while blessings are invoked upon the donor. It is but a picture of real life, this glimpse into the crowded street, through the blinding snow, this jangling of misery with luxury, this mingling of the cries of the unfortunate with the more favored, these mute pleadings of want with the cold indifference of the thoughtless.

But the charity which satisfies itself by the mere giving of alms to the organ-grinder, or beggar, these representatives of a large class, is in harmony with the advance of our civilization? Does it agree with the dignity of our humanity? The giver looks in scorn upon the receiver of his alms, while the beggar, his nobler nature degraded by his act, looks up to the donor as one superior to himself. But if the coin dropped carefully into his hand were the result of honest labor, then it would come to the receiver as a real blessing, ministering to a healthful independence of character, which would raise him above the more circumstance of birth or position.

What then is true charity, and how does it differ from alms-giving? Nearly 2000 years ago, the Master said, "The poor ye have always with you." History points back over the past, and establishes this as the one truth in all human experience. It is as apparent to-day, and needs no prophecy to assure us that it will be the characteristic of the future. And, flowing by its side, runs that other truth to those who would do good by the exercise of real benevolence—that true charity "blesseth him that gives and him that takes," and that he only "who gives with his right hand and conceals with his left, overcometh all."

The great objection to giving alms is the uncertainty of the worthiness of the object upon which they are bestowed. Drunkards and tramps are certainly an undesirable class. To give alms to the first is to encourage the ravages of the second is to increase the number of those traveling leeches; to offer rewards to idleness augments the evils of pauperism and paves the way for terrible crimes. True charity, then, is not to be found along these lines.

The real secret in the solution of the question lies in helping all to help themselves as far as possible, while organized benevolence cares for those who are no longer able to provide for their necessities. And these are the principles which are gradually but surely shaping the generous thought and kindly deeds of the truly charitable in all the most advanced nations of the world. In the large cities institutions are established, either by private benevolence or the government, for the purpose of helping the honest poor. Here the aged find a refuge, and spend their last days in peace; the sick are cared for in hospitals; the orphan is clothed and fed in asylums; and to all classes the common school opens wide its doors, and the child who is to become the future citizen is there taught to prize and maintain his honest independence.

The strong and healthy man is provided with work and fair wages and admitted to all honors and enjoyment of society, if he will but honor himself. No one need subject his soul to the cruel experience of the beggar, or to learn the truth spoken by a great teacher, who said that "each man is a wounded man, and each man is a wounder." To give alms is the ennobling of a moment covered by the gloom of approaching clouds. True charity shines steadily and brightly, and by its genial light allures the unfortunate to honest self-dependence and proud contentment.

Occasionally, in the history of our own times, we have examples of noble men who have solved the question of the relations between alms giving and true charity. Prominent among these stand the names of Stephen Girard and George Peabody, who deserve the admiration and honor bestowed upon their memory, because they sought the real elevation of their fellows, and bestowed not their vast wealth for mere ostentatious benevolence, but proved that it was possible to possess riches without sacrificing to the treasures of our hearts. George Peabody, during his stay in London, distributed large sums in various wisely considered plans for the poor. Before his death $2,500,000 were expended by him in lodging houses for those who had no homes, and in wretched tenements with no comforts. And by his will other large amounts have been applied to the erection of small houses, where, at low rates, the industrious man may surround himself with the comforts and safeguards of a home. In the southern states over $2,000,000 were given by this noble philanthropist for the education of colored children, and smaller sums were placed where they will be fountains of real good to the race, and reflect honor upon his memory forever.

True charity, as opposed to the mere giving of alms, is sometimes condemned as being harsh and unjust. But, thought at first sight the way pointed out by true charity may seem cruel, the reward is attained at the end of the road. The welfare of a nation depends upon the number of its industrious, honest, self-respecting men and women. Consequently, if the population of a country is allowed by a false charity to form habits of idleness, the nation, losing its energy and noble pride, will cease to thrive, and the seeds of indolence will grow to an abundant harvest of corruption and crime.

True charity, then, consists in the bestowment not of alms to the individual, but in the establishment of hospitals and asylums, in the education of the masses and in making all kinds of honest labor honorable, and in giving respect to the man, rather than to his circumstances. And he is truly a benefactor to humanity who points his unfortunate fellow man to the path where he may learn the glory of independence and how to secure the happiness of a self-respecting, noble manhood.

"As the rivers find their flowing, In the highest hills have birth; As the baugen broadest growing Oftentimes have been to earth; So the noblest minds press forward Channels far of good to trace; So the largest hearts bend downward, Circles all the human race."

Wm. H. Waste delivered an excellent oration on "Character in Political Life." He held that no person should stoop to dishonest acts in public life, and looked forward to the time when party divisions should be taken away from the politicians and when the time comes that the statesmen act thoroughly their duty to God and man, we shall have the proudest nation on the face of the earth.

Mr. Louis Heine then played a violin solo by Goltzman in an expressive manner.

Margaret L. Shields read an essay on "Might vs. Right," in which she said, "worldly success, though universally coveted, is only desirable when obtained in a just way. He who gains his money or his fame by dishonest means is not to be envied. Might purchases kingdoms, overthrows republics, converts the innocent, clears the guilty, provided he has a silver purse, but the end is not yet. Go straight forward, turning neither to the right or to the left, be honest, though thou standest in the throng of knaves, nobly do thy duty though fortune should smile on thee, and thou shalt stand true and live in obscurity. Man's praise is of little worth, fame is both fluctuating and perishable.

The debate on the subject following: "Resolved, That the Passion for Fame has been a Benefit to the World," by Samuel T. Carson, affirmative, and Moses G. Norton, negative, was quite interesting and left the hearers in doubt as to whether there had been a benefit or not.

Florence Riley's essay, "The Golden Fleece," related the story of Jason and the Argonauts of old, and brought her story down to the voyagers of Sir John Franklin and Lieut. Greely, who had made the search for the fabled treasure. The Argonauts did not win their treasures without temptations and trials. So it will be with us; if we would gain our prize we must press steadily onward, and when at last we shall have our golden fleece it will be far dearer, won by our own unflinching endeavors.

Miss Anna Pendleton sang "He Loves Me! He Loves Me Not" with a very clear voice and excellent method.

Marco I. W. Hellman delivered the following oration on

THE OUTLOOK IN EUROPE.

Since history is said to repeat itself, the future of a country or a continent can be best discerned by a study of its past, therefore, would we read the future, let us read the past. The most ancient records tell us that it was invaded by tribes of nomads from Asia. Of these the Greeks and Romans were the first to become civilized, the reason of which is found in the well known maxim that man advances most where nature is most propitious. No civilization commences in the tropics and gradually advances toward the colder regions. Among the southern nations advancement in civilization was followed by a proportionate advancement in power; and then happened what occurred several times since, power of the world was divided between two great nations, followed by the inevitable struggle for the mastery in which the Latins conquered.

A little later Rome sunk in the lap of luxury, overcome by corruption, no longer mistress of the world, was subdued by a horde of northern barbarians. Again and we were surging armies, and Charlemagne gradually became the central head to which the nations looked for advice and government. After his death the empire of the Franks became divided into States, not much unlike the distribution of territory as found in Europe at the present time.

Now divided into petty principalities Europe was torn by internal conflicts. One prince having a feud with another the two sought, dragging others also into the struggle; such was the thirty years' war which desolated Germany from one end to the other. Throughout Europe continued conflict, until in the general involved condition, the weaker principalities were absorbed by the stronger.

The people under the pressure of the feudal system and its results, became impatient, and the muzzling storm drew to a head in France where the nobles and king had been most arrogant, and although we cannot sympathize with the wholesale slaughter of the French revolution, yet there is any justification for such fury and havoc of property and life it surely was found by the French in that excited epoch of history.

Out of this chaos Napoleon Bonaparte drew brief order, but to the ordinary mind did not seem to him the usurpation of a hereditary throne and immediately declared war. But the little Corsican corporal was equal to his task, and having defeated the powers one by one remained for over twelve years Europe's undisputed master. He was a man of property and life it surely was found by the French in that excited epoch of history.

Out of this chaos Napoleon Bonaparte drew brief order, but to the ordinary mind did not seem to him the usurpation of a hereditary throne and immediately declared war. But the little Corsican corporal was equal to his task, and having defeated the powers one by one remained for over twelve years Europe's undisputed master. He was a man of property and life it surely was found by the French in that excited epoch of history.

We may regret the July revolution of 1830 and the general revolution of 1848, which settled favorably the question of constitutional government in Western Europe as result of the great revolution of 1789.

In 1862, Prussia having recovered from the effects of the ruinous oppression of Napoleon grew again ambitious of gaining the lead in Germany. Having waged war with Denmark she took from her the provinces of Schleswig-Holstein. Austria which alone opposed Prussia's wishes was next attacked and defeated, then came the turn of her ancient foe and here Prussia proved the more powerful, and the battle of Sedan was fought, and the French emperor was taken prisoner. This event has left a decided impression upon the politics of Europe, as the descendants of the Gauls are very anxious to regain their ancient territory and prestige.

The greatest of Russia's ambitions is to obtain possession of Constantinople, in order to have a southern seaport. This, Austria and England are compelled to oppose, as it would unsettle the balance of power.

Austria is particularly interested, because she is the nearest to the Bosphorus; and England, because she fears the encroachments of the northern bear upon her Indian possessions. Thus we see two great causes that may produce a European war in the near future, the outcome of which it is hard to foretell. But according to present indications, and following our law that civilization advances northward, Russia will be the great State of Europe when once she adopts a constitutional government. But like all unlimited monarchies she must first learn that the people have rights which are to be respected, for so, and so only, can any nation secure permanent prosperity.

Amelia G. Gassen read an essay on the "Stars," giving brief history of the celestial bodies from the time the ancient shepherds studied the heavens until the present. The essay was very interesting.

Carl G. Packard's oration was entitled "The Crown of God," and was dedicated by the subject, his discourse was in relation to the mankind of all nations. He introduced considerable humor in his remarks and succeeded in amusing, to considerable extent, his audience. His concluding sentences, however, were serious and showed more thought than is usually evinced in youthful minds.

Hattie E. Perkins' essay on "Unwritten Music" was very interesting, especially as it related to the grand old music of the world, the music of the wind and the gentle zephyr. "Who ever heard written music as sweet as that of the birds, wordless, for they have not the wonderful power of speech which we possess. Yet in our greatest achievements have nothing equal to their melodies."

Following this was Miss Lizzie Heine's violin solo by Viennese. It was most appropriate and was highly appreciated.

Miss Mary A. Desmond read an essay on "The Crown of God," which was quite interesting. She said that the mystery of progression is that every change is not decay alone, but leads to something higher, nobler and better. "Onward, heroes and sages call to us from the misty past; that the crescent promise of their spirits may be fulfilled in the younger day."

Thomas J. Foster's oration on the "Greek Abroad" was purely historical in its nature, but was instructive because interestingly presented. He found fault with the American groundwork of instruction because too many things were taken as axioms. "It is true that no century has made such rapid progress as the Nineteenth, neither has any other century had the foundation for such progress."

Miss Mary L. Hays' essay on "The Native American" discussed the Indian question quite learnedly. She concluded by saying: "Surely an American people will not stand by and see insolent wrong unrebuked. If there is a drop of brotherly love in our veins—a spark of justice in our hearts—we shall not rest until our nation has washed the stain from her garment of liberty and mended the flaw in her rod of power which assumes to protect all the oppressed. When we shall have blotted out the memory of the 'Century of Dishonor' in a song far more sweet because no longer freighted with the groans of a people in bondage."

Henry P. Wilson's oration on "A Problem of the Age" was very well received. His subject was the relation of capital to labor, and his conclusion reached as to the remedy for the troubles which have arisen was that there should be "mutual concession and conciliation, but owing to human nature it is hard to bring about this result, and at present the question of capital vs. labor is as hard to solve in this country as the Irish question in Great Britain."

Mr. Louis Heine's flute solo, by Puerstmann and was excellently rendered.

Antonio A. Salvemini's poem entitled "The Prince's Gift" was worthy of more notice than space will permit it to be given.

Kate Bottoms read the class essay entitled "Our Past," in which she gave a history of the class from September, 1883, when a subscription was formed. This branch of the subject she concluded by saying: "Neither death nor marriage have assailed our ranks or carried away a single captive, and the years have passed pleasantly and without dissension or discord. The future she predicted as applicable to the characteristics of each of the members of the class. Some are to be lawyers, clerks, bankers, detectives, poets, scientists, doctors and members of Congress."

John A. Brewer's oration, "The Centennial of Our Constitution," was quite interesting and spoke of the difference between the year 1776 and the present, when the morning newspapers gather and bring to all from every quarter of the globe the noteworthy events of the last four and twenty hours, and we feel ourselves in truth heirs of all the ages in the foremost files of time. Former ages spoke of the dawn of civilization in far off lands. We live but in the morning of that world. As the sun mounts toward the meridian, may we not look forward to the realization of the poet's dream, "In the Parliament of Man, the Federation of the World."

VALEDICTORY.

Miss Cordelia Dunkelberger delivered the following valedictory: As the soldier reports himself a ranking soldier, so we now address ourselves to our superiors in rank, the members of the Board of Education and our city Superintendent. To you for faithful and enlightened discharge of duties our first thanks are due. We realize it has been at the cost of our individual sacrifices, but that the consciousness of work well done may be a partial compensation. The class of '87 has had the happiness to see elected to your Honorable Board the first woman holding office in this city, and we trust that the future of our public will retain her in that place as long as she will accept it and we believe that her official career will be characterized by the same sympathy, patience and wisdom which we as her pupils were accustomed to enjoy. While we regret to part a few weeks ago, with our principal and class teacher, we are proud that a just tribute has been paid to his talents and that the work in which he is engaged is eminently congenial. It is a scene of pleasure to us that his successor should be one who has been with us during the whole four years of our course. Our drawing superintendent also deserves special mention for the careful and efficient work he has been enabled to accomplish by instruction. To you, our instructors, one and all, we would express our appreciation of your labors, and although to night ends our relation as teachers and pupils, we will ever remain your sincere friends. To our many friends here present we offer our thanks for the interest they have shown, not only this evening but throughout our whole school life. Let us remind the graduates that all true scholarship has been gained by the sacrifice of individual pleasures and that the student who is not willing to be marred by the fact that some good work has been done by the class of '87. Yet the coming year cannot be compassed by the magician's spell, nor will it be like the farce of conception of heaven's place where there is nothing to do; and it will be well if you learn now that it will be one of labor and not of repose. School days speed swiftly, and before we are well started on the journey we tonight begin, you will be our fellow travelers. Class days, during the past four years have we done the best of which we were capable? If there be a deficiency, we have not the excuse of lack of opportunity for which to ask the world to make allowance. There is no such thing in fact, as making allowances. Lucke says we are born with powers and faculties capable of almost anything, but it is the application that gives absolute skill in anything. All make-believe produces little impression upon the mind, and the real whose success is lasting.

Some of us will pursue our studies in higher institutions of learning; others must call their school days ended; but if there be an especial talent we are conscious, possessing by which we may be brought into contact with the world, let it be trained and encouraged whether the gift be for music, or drawing, or painting, or typesetting, or carving, or sewing, or cooking. Let not that mysterious power, flash of genius, or selection of a specialty, but if we cannot be Raphaels, then let us design billboards and posters and excel all others in that homely business. Let our life's work embody that which is characteristic of ourselves. Intellectually, morally, spiritually, we can never do more nor better than to give evidence of possessing that which is of supreme value,—blameless lives.

We may excite wonder or admiration, but nothing will be of genuine value unless it does not exalt or purify life. Whatever may be our future attainments; however far apart we may wander, let us be united in giving to the City of the Queen of the Angels the dear and tender name Home, and in answer to her loving call to our Alma Mater, the Los Angeles High School. And now, with happy memories of the past and bright hopes for the future, we as classmates part.

The High School Quartette then sang so sweetly that they were forced to respond to an encore, which was not satisfied with one, but demanded two in addition to the one on the programme.

CONCLUDING EXERCISES.

Dr. Kurtz then said: "Ladies and gentlemen. Before handing to you the diplomas which you so well deserve, I take pleasure in making a few remarks which I am convinced will not fall upon deaf ears. We, the Board of Education, have endeavored to give you, through the medium of well-selected teachers, as thorough an education as young people in High Schools usually receive. We were obliged to rely on your own energies in a great measure, as we could not furnish the necessary school rooms, but the fault was not ours, as I have already stated to the audience. It affords us the more pleasure to know that you have overcome the obstacles, and are now ready to quit the benches for other pursuits in life, to which our best wishes accompany you."

But now the question may present itself to you of what use will all this learning be to us hereafter? In answering this question, I would tell you that the education you have received is but the corner-stone of still more learning. And no matter what pursuits you choose, you will all have to learn a good deal more to make yourself useful to your fellowmen.

In a professional career a thorough education is an absolute necessity, and every day path of life you will find that all which you have learned will prove no burden to you, but on the contrary, you will soon discover that your education you possess an imperishable treasure, more precious than wealth.

An accomplished woman is the greatest attraction of a home and an educated man will succeed where the ignorant must despair. I therefore say build upon this corner-stone of learning as much as you can, never part with your book, and the answer to your questions will be a happy one.

Dr. Kurtz then handed each of the class a diploma, after which the audience departed while the Heine quartette played a musical selection.

Mr. Husher, Who Goes Up

In the Examiner balloon next Sunday at the Sixth street baseball park, is one of the best photographers in the United States. He was for a long while a reporter on the Louisville Courier-Journal. He is now possessed of considerable means, and is head artist for Mr. Taber, of San Francisco. "Take good care of him," said Mr. Taber in lending him to the Examiner, "I can't afford to lose him."

Sturk Improvements.

Street railways and buildings to be built. By a resolution passed by the Board of Directors a street railway is to be commenced immediately on Olive avenue, and completed as soon as possible; also ten more new buildings to be commenced and completed as fast as men and material can be provided, as the demand for buildings is far in excess of the supply.

DAILY HERALD.

A BEAUTIFUL COUNTRY

To be Invaded by a Railroad.

FINE FERTILE FOOTHILLS.

The New Standard Gauge Road Between Los Angeles and Santa Monica.

For some time past there has been a growing demand for foothill property, and the demand has become so great and universal that the property lying along the base of the mountains in this county has commanded a large premium over low land property. For a home, the class of people that are coming to Southern California, want a high elevation near the mountains, where the air is laden with a delicious fragrance and where fogs are unknown.

Pasadena, Monrovia, and other flourishing foothill towns owe their growth, progress and prosperity to this sensible desire of the people. Property all along the foothills has doubled in value in the past six months, and it may be said, with a reasonable degree of certainty, that in a year or so no piece of foothill property in this county can be bought for much less than a thousand dollars an acre. Resulting from these facts a shrewd and powerful syndicate of Los Angeles capitalists have purchased the De Buenos Ayres ranch, which is a little more than half way between here and Santa Monica, adjacent to the Southern Pacific Railroad, and which comprises over 4000 acres of some of the finest foothill and valley land in Southern California.

In view of the attention now being given to the foothill country, a reporter of the HERALD made a rapid run through it recently, for the purpose of noting its natural advantages, as well as the developments in progress, and especially to get an idea of the route of the projected railway, and to look over the ranch above mentioned.

The ranch, which was reached after about an hour's drive along the foothills and within a half mile circuit of the proposed line, is delightfully situated and endowed with advantages that very few places possess. On the east is a splendid view of Pasadena, the Raymond Hotel, and Los Angeles; on the west the ocean, Port Ballona and Santa Monica, on the south a beautiful valley sloping towards Wilmington and San Pedro, with Long Beach in the distance, while in the north are the majestic Santa Monica mountains, which are only interrupted with passes and dales and redundant with springs, romantic scenery and flowers.

The gentlemen in the syndicate are Dan. W. McFarland, L. T. Garusey, E. S. Hall, S. W. Luitwiler, C. J. Killa, J. S. Townner, F. C. Garbut and J. W. Hoyt, and they have organized themselves into a company which will be known as the Los Angeles and Santa Monica Land and Water Company. Another syndicate has already secured the right of way for a street car line from the city to the ranch, and the railroad, which will be run by steam, will have its starting point on Bellevue avenue, below the Sisters' Hospital, and have a horse-car connection with Main street, and will have a convenient shaped course to Santa Monica, passing through many fine ranches, including the De Buenos Ayres, where a fine depot and station will be built. A portion of the track has already been graded and the remaining work will be completed in a few days. A little nearer the hills is being constructed the Sunset Boulevard—a drive that will be five miles long, and the driveway 100 feet wide. This fine road will commence at the northwest end of the city limits and extend, as already surveyed, some five miles towards Santa Monica, and in a short time it will undoubtedly be continued to that place. The roadway will be macadamized, and when completed will probably be the finest and most traveled pleasure driveway in the county. All these improvements will have a great tendency to build up this part of the country and the syndicate which purchased the De Buenos Ayres ranch intend that it shall afford the finest and most beautiful places for residences in Southern California.

The many beautiful knolls on the ranch afford, as has been stated before, fine views of the entire surrounding country, and for residences it would seem that no more desirable spot can be obtained. The climate here is all that could be wished for. In the hottest weather this favored spot is always fanned with gentle breezes from the ocean, while in the winter the altitude of the place is such that the temperature is always very even and regular. The facilities for reaching the business center of the sea shore are such as will greatly popularize this section of the county, and it is only a question of time till this section of our suburban district will be one of the veritable paradises of Southern California, far surpassing for view and comfort any valley in this portion of the State.

THROUGH DESPONDENCE.

Wm. Carleton Takes an Overdose of Morphine.

William Carleton, who has been stopping at the St. Charles Hotel for some time past, was found dead in his bed at 10 o'clock yesterday morning by Stephen G. Luson, the manager of the house. It appears that some months ago the deceased came to this part of the State from Lowell, Massachusetts, and that prior to that time he had been engaged in business and owned a home in Spencer. He went to the St. Charles Hotel on or about the 23rd of May and since that time has been there, but has made it a point to pay his bill every day. Recently he was having a good deal of trouble and at one time said he would get out of the way. He did not tell what his trouble was, however, but he seemed to be restless and very much discouraged, especially as he was lame. He had retired to his room at an early hour on Tuesday night and yesterday morning when he did not arise at the usual time Mr. Luson looked over his transom and saw him lying on the bed dressed. The door was opened and on a chair at the head of the bed was found a vial containing morphine. In his wallet were found the following unfinished letters, which indicated the state of his mind:

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 14, 1887.

Dear Brother Geddis and all the balance of the folks, there in Mass. I was so glad to get a letter from you once more and know that you was yet living and as you say in poor health and glad that your family are as well as they are. I know from Emma that Lizzie's health is very poor and I am sorry.

LOS ANGELES, June, 1887.

Dear Brother S. H. Geddis: Your very kind letter was received and I was so glad to hear from you and more and know that you are well and that you haven't entirely forgotten me. I am here and in a bad fix. I am sick and have been for the past 2 weeks no friend or any one to look after me. I have been a pretty good man but I am now out in the cold with no one to care for me and I cannot now the man I once was. I blame no one but myself for the fix I am in but I won't be long I shall be here, my time is short and on this earth as a moving creature about drawing to a close. There is no one cares for me any more Emma hasn't treated me as she ought still I can't blame her very much. She has tried to do the best she could or what she thought was for the best but we have both made great mistakes during our lives and now you see how we are situated. She is there and I hope happy with her friend and I am way out here sick and alone and don't care to live any longer. I am the one that is the most to blame. I am satisfied a terrible fool when I mortgaged the home in Spencer and ever came to this county but at the time I thought it was all right but now I know it was all wrong and this worrying me to death and has got me nearly crazy thinking about it. The cash we have invested here I can't get back. It appears that everything for several years has worked against us. The time was when it was otherwise, but that I think I guess has passed. I think I am in my dotage. I am nearly crazy anyway. I have no comfort at all, either day or night. It is think and think, and what does it amount to? Nothing. Oh, dear, I must stop and live longer, for I am not able to set up longer. Will try to finish this to-morrow. So good night. God bless you all.

In the wallet were also found letters from his wife, Emma A. Carleton, from Lowell, Mass., which encouraged him and which showed that she took the deepest interest in his welfare and offered to help him in anything he might undertake. There was also found an agreement to purchase a lot in one of the towns hereabout, drawn in favor of Emma A. Carleton. There was also a bank book, with an account of $425 in the Los Angeles County Bank, where it was ascertained that the money had all been drawn. He had upon his person $25, and that was probably all that he had left to live upon.

An inquest was held by Dr. Meredith yesterday afternoon, and the evidence thereat was similar to the above, from which the jury came to the conclusion that he had died from an overdose of morphine, taken with suicidal intent. Dr. Meredith telegraphed to Mrs. Carleton yesterday afternoon, but received no reply.

Though Shaken Like a Leaf

By the most trivial causes, weak nerves are easily susceptible of irritation, a term which also imports, in this instance, quietude. The nervous have but to use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters systematically to overcome that super-sensitiveness of the human sensorium, which is subservient of all bodily comfort and mental tranquillity, and which renders most burly upon the system. The difficulty underlying this, as well as other ailments, is imperfect assimilation, no food being properly digested of the food. In the discharge of the body's digestive and assimilative functions, the Bitters are the most potent, the most reliable auxiliary. As the body regains vigor and regularity by its brain and nervous system are also benefited. Persons subject to the influence of malaria, dyspepsia and rheumatic invasions, and persons whose kidneys are inactive, should also use the Bitters.

Cheap, Choice, Near-by Acre Property.

The odd blocks in the Providencia Ranch, embracing 40 acres each, located west of and near the town of Burbank, will be placed on the market at one hundred dollars per acre on Monday morning, July 6th. The quality and fertility of the soil and the near-by location makes this the cheapest acre property in Los Angeles.

All Property Owners

On Olive, Orange Grove and Angelina avenues, in the town of Burbank, are requested to call at the office of the company, No. 12 South Spring street, at once, on matters of importance to themselves.

Shortness of Breath.

DR. FLINT'S HEART REMEDY should be taken at once when slight exertion or a walk leads to produce shortness of breath or pain in the region of the heart. At all drug stores, or J. J. Mack & Co., 9 and 11 Front street, San Francisco.

A New Lumber Yard

Has been established by the Schallert-Gaull Lumber Company on Commercial street, nearly opposite the Washington Hotel, where they will keep a full line of all kinds of lumber and building material.

Take It in Time.

A man who presents an appearance of debility, whose countenance is anxious, and who is subject to spells of faintness, is liable to sudden death from heart disease. Let him take Dr. Flint's Heart Remedy before it is too late. At drug stores, or address J. J. Mack & Co., S. F.
